

The graph shows that the number of fishers increases as the number of fish increases, up to a point. After this point, the number of fishers decreases as the number of fish increases. This is because the number of fishers is limited by the number of fish available.

DISCUSSION

The graph shows that the number of fishers increases as the number of fish increases, up to a point. After this point, the number of fishers decreases as the number of fish increases. This is because the number of fishers is limited by the number of fish available.

The graph shows that the number of fishers increases as the number of fish increases, up to a point. After this point, the number of fishers decreases as the number of fish increases. This is because the number of fishers is limited by the number of fish available.

The graph shows that the number of fishers increases as the number of fish increases, up to a point. After this point, the number of fishers decreases as the number of fish increases. This is because the number of fishers is limited by the number of fish available.